Sermon : Philippians 2:19-30 “Genuine Concern”

Discipleship:
From, “Disruptive Witness,” by Alan Noble (Part 1)

Life is miraculous, As Adults, that miraculousness weighs on us. But children naturally perceive and delight in the irreducible wonder of life. Observe a toddler’s joy in simply walking or jumping. Observe a toddler’s joy in simply walking or jumping. My nearly two-year old daughter can hardly get both of her feet off the ground when she jumps. It looks more like skipping in place, and half the time she lands on her bottom. But when she is “jumping” she can hardly contain her pleasure, because her body is amazing. Her pure excitement overwhelms my wife and me—we can’t help but cheer her on, even though her jumping is technical speaking, pretty sad. In these moments the praise we give is not feigned praise for her jumping; we praise her for taking delight in the goodness of being. This is the same praise we give her when she hands us a dandelion as if it were the most precious flower in the universe. That’s the only kind of flower a little girls ever gives to her parents. Our gratitude is not condescending, but a brief acknowledgment that at some level she is able to see the wonder in the world that we have become numb to. On some level she is right; it is the most precious flower in the universe.

The fact that we are alive, that we have agency, that we are capable of such tremendous heights and depths emotionally, that our minds have such a capacity for love and creation and reason, that our objective experiences appear to have irreducible meaning and value despite the fact that they are subjective—all of these things burden us. They beauty and goodness of our particular being demands some justification: What right do I have to such a life? Without a justification, we feel like phonies, frauds, failures, or, at best, lost.

In one way, or another, we all must find a way to justify our existence in the world, to offer some validation, some evidence that explains why we are . It is in some ways, a terrifying burden. Felt against the background of a cold, indifferent, impersonal universe, our being can only be explained as an illusion of evolution— an accident of the development of consciousness. But for most of us, that is not satisfying answer, so we will look elsewhere...

-Mrs. Evelyn Alice Janaro age 91 of Bradenton passed away Saturday, July 6, 2019, at Windsor Manor Health and Rehab in Starke, Fla. She was our Pastor’s Grandmother. Services will be at a later date. Our love and prayers are with them.

-Christian love and sympathy to the family of Steve Gliniewicz who died Tuesday. Memorial Services will be held later this month.

Church Family,
Thank you so much for the keychain and card that you gave me for graduation. I really love them! It’s comforting to know that I have such a thoughtful and supportive church family in my corner. The keychain serves as a great reminder of the people who have helped get me to this point in life. I can’t thank you enough for the kindness and support you’ve given me over the last 4 years and before. FFBC will always be my home church, and I will cherish the support given from my church family always.
Thanks Again,
Michaela Ready
